Mid-Term Annual Conference 2023

Dear Colleagues,

Human life expectancy has increased as a result of advancements in socioeconomic and healthcare systems. Adults over the age of 60 are a rapidly expanding cohort, with growth rates more than twice those of younger population.

With an expected 22% of the world's population reaching elderly status by 2050, the burden on the health care system and economy will be significant in the coming years. However, this demographic shift has come with its own set of challenges for geriatric care in India. The lack of awareness about geriatric care is a major issue. Many elderly citizens are not aware of their healthcare needs and do not seek medical attention until it's too late. Additionally, the healthcare infrastructure in India is not equipped to handle the overwhelming increase in the number of geriatric patients.

The Indian government has taken several steps to improve the healthcare services for the elderly. The National Programme for the Health Care of the Elderly (NPHCE) was launched in 2010 to provide comprehensive healthcare services to elderly citizens. The programme has helped in improving access to healthcare services through the establishment of geriatric clinics, mobile health units, and palliative care services.

Private healthcare providers, charitable organizations and NGOs in India are now also trying to address the needs of the elderly but there is a lack of knowledge and training in geriatric care.

The Geriatric Society of India is a professional organization of healthcare professionals concerned with the care of elderly patients in India. Its aim is to promote the health and well-being of the elderly individuals, to improve the quality of care provided to them and to advance geriatric education and research. The society conducts conferences and workshops, publishes journals, and advocates for policies and programs that address the needs of the aging population. It also collaborates with other national and international organizations to promote healthy aging.

We the member of organizing committee of the GSICON has immense pleasure and pride in cordially inviting all practicing physicians, researchers, academicians from all over India to participate in the Geriatric Society of India Mid-Term Annual Conference to be held on 26th -27th August 2023 at Scientific Convention Center, King George's Medical University, Lucknow, U.P.

In this annual national conference, we will invite eminent geriatric experts, geriatrics scholars, government decision-makers, professional activists, and researchers in geriatric care. It will also provide the latest information on clinical care, research on aging, and innovative models of care delivery.

With the presence of some of the most renowned speakers, you can expect to gain an in-depth understanding of the latest advancements in geriatric care.

With best wishes
